

MRS. COOLIDGE IS CENTER OF INTEREST AT FLORIDA RESORT

Women Gather About Her As She Sits in Hotel Lounge

SHE LIKES PEOPLE

Goes About Town in A Democratic Manner and Mingles With the Crowds

ATT. DORA, Fla., Feb. 11.—(INS)—Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, who is vacationing with her husband at Lakeside Inn, on the shore of beautiful Lake Dora, in Central Florida, is as popular in this little village as she is back home in Northampton, Mass. Everyone in town, and particularly the women folk, say she is "just wonderful."

When they asked her to dedicate a Portugal cypress tree at the community building she was glad to oblige. Her willingness, her geniality, her smile for all—rich and poor—has endeared her to the villagers. Each evening, as she sits in the lounge of the Lakeside Inn, she is the center of an interested and animated group. She is extremely democratic and few persons, not knowing her, would suspect that only a short time back she was "the first lady of the land."

She is very "homey" in her demeanor. Each evening she can be found in the hotel lounge, conversing with her women friends or crocheting. She likes folks and folks like her.

It is a common sight to see Mrs. Coolidge, alone, strolling along the streets or doing a little shopping. The other day she went into a grocery store which happened to be crowded. Not waiting on for some time she strolled out. Someone recognized her. An employee rushed out with an explanation of how busy they were but she only smiled. She hadn't minded it a bit.

Mrs. Coolidge has a real sense of humor, as evidenced by a story they tell here. The other day, accompanied by a woman friend or two, she went to Daytona. A girl reporter managed to catch up with her but wasn't sure she had the right party.

"You look a great deal like Mrs. Coolidge," the girl reporter said.

"Yes, I've been taken for Mrs. Coolidge a number of times," Mrs. Coolidge replied with a disarming smile.

The girl reporter departed, somewhat nonplussed.

Mrs. Coolidge prefers to remain out of the limelight. On the occasion when she dedicated the cypress tree she willingly posed for a picture but it was more for "the good of the cause" than by inclination. Like her illustrious husband, she is very modest.

Mr. Coolidge, too, is often seen in the village. Hardly a day passes that he does not take a long hike through the streets by himself. He nods to passersby who recognize him and occasionally stops to speak.

The village barber got the kick of his life the other day when Mr. Coolidge came in for a haircut.

"A fine, quiet gentleman," was the barber's verdict. "Very little to say. Just said: 'Not too much off the back.'"

The darkie who operates the barber shop shoe shine is still talking of how he had the honor of polishing the ex-president's boots. He never thought he'd get a "break" like that.

Folks of Mount Dora will be sorry to see the Coolidges head back for the North. And maybe the Coolidges will be a little sorry, too.

Lanza Takes Important Part in Concert in Italy

Word has just been received here of the success in the field of music which Joseph Lanza, of Washington street, is making.

Young Lanza, who showed great adeptness toward the violin while a youngster here, was sent a little more than a year ago by his parents to Milan, Italy, to study the violin under Roberto Vacchi.

Lanza, who is only twenty-two years old, has since made such rapid progress that he took an important part in a concert given during the first week of February in the Salone del Concerti, Dell' Instituto del Cieschi, Milan, by Vacchi. In the quartet numbers and also in the orchestra ones, Lanza was first violinist. He also played a solo number, "Zingaresca," by Sarasate, and pleasing the audience, rendered "Adoration," by Borowski, as an encore.

Great things are expected of Lanza by his Bristol friends.

DADS TO SMOKE AND ENJOY ENTERTAINMENT

Fathers' Association at High School to Have Enjoyable Evening

EXPECT LARGE CROWD

The Bristol Fathers' Association is making big preparations for its monthly meeting to be held on Thursday evening, February 13th. The meeting will partake of the nature of a "Smoker" and pipes and tobacco will be furnished free to all who attend.

An entertainment composed of local talent is being prepared by the committee, after which a basketball contest will be staged between two teams, made up of members of the association. A volley-ball match will also take place between teams representing the older members of the association.

The feature of the evening will be a show to be put on by Charles Rathke, Bristol's infatigable comedian. There will be vocal and instrumental selections, impersonations, experiments in the realm of mystery, and the presentation of a beautiful silk flag to the Bristol High School as a gift from the Fathers' Association.

All indications point to the fact that it will be a night of fun, frolic, pleasure and enjoyment. The meeting is open to all the men of the town, whether they have children in the schools or not, and each member of the association is urged to bring a friend along with him. It is hoped that this will be one of the largest meetings yet held.

The meeting last month was well attended and unusual interest was manifested. Since the meeting it has been learned that a number of citizens will apply for membership at this meeting.

Several of the old members who have dropped out have announced their intention of being reinstated. Everything indicates a revival of interest and a bright future for the association.

At the conclusion of the meeting on Thursday evening, the usual luncheon will be served in the cafeteria.

Blessed Virgin Statue Returned During Night

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Feb. 11.—"The statue has been returned."

These are the words on all lips in this vicinity today.

When the janitor of St. Charles' parish buildings, Patrick Friel, arrived at St. Charles' Church this morning at seven o'clock he beheld upon the steps of the edifice the statue of the Blessed Virgin Mary which was stolen from St. Charles' School Hall during a dance Saturday night.

The piece of statuary was first missed at about 11:45 Saturday night, and it was presumed the thief or thieves had made away with it down the rear stairs as many were in the main corridor during the dance held by the Union Fire Company of Cornwells Heights. About 200 were in the building, and it puzzled all to learn that the statue, about two feet in height, had been taken from the structure without detection.

Yesterday a reward of $50 was offered to the individual giving information that would lead to the arrest and conviction of those taking the statue.

The statue of the Virgin was valued by the Rev. Francis J. Flood as the gift of a friend, now deceased; and members of the parish and the organization backing the dance, as well as the populace in general rejoiced today with Rev. Flood in the fact that the statue was returned undamaged. As it was not on the church steps at 11 last night it is presumed that it was returned during the night.

TIE PAPERS TIGHT SO THEY WILL NOT BLOW OVER STREETS

Council Discusses Careless Citizen and Also Careless Ash Collector

TO ENFORCE ORDINANCE

Business District to Have The Streets Cleaned More Frequently

There was considerable discussion in Borough Council last night about clean streets and the careless and thoughtless manner in which residents place loose paper along the thoroughfares for the ash collector and the careless manner in which the ash collector permits ashes, paper and debris to blow from his wagon onto the streets.

Both the ash collector and the careless resident came in for criticism and council was of one accord that the provisions of the ordinance regulating the collection of ashes and rubbish should be strictly enforced.

The discussion started when a communication was read from the Mill Street Business Men's Association requesting that streets of that district be cleaned at more frequent intervals. It was stated upon the floor of Council that the streets of the business section are now being cleaned at regular intervals and that the Street Committee would continue the practice.

Jacob C. Schmidt, chairman of Street Committee, said that yesterday he noticed the careless manner in which the ash collector was doing his work. "I also noticed the piles of papers in boxes and baskets placed along the sidewalk for the ash collector," he said. "I think it would be (Continued on Page Four)

WHY NOT "U. S."?

From the beginning the United States has sought to avoid creating the impression that it was monopolizing the limelight in the naval limitations conference and the events that led up to it. Versed in the psychology of nations, Washington found it expedient to have it appear that Great Britain was taking the lead in the movement.

Now the other powers represented at the London conference have, in a gracious mood, extended to the Washington delegates the privilege of having the first audience in the discussion of all major problems. This chivalrous gesture toward the stranger from afar was made to seem parliamentary by adopting an alphabetical order for the discussions and considering "America" as first in that order.

It would be equally magnanimous on the part of our delegates were they to decline the honor of being officially recognized as representing "America" and ask to be considered in the alphabetical arrangement under the classification of "United States." After all, the United States is but a part of "America" and has no desire to take undue advantage of the world-wide practice of considering "America" as synonymous with the "United States of America."

Little niceties of this sort play a crucial part in international diplomacy, and one trivial act which may be interpreted into a slight can destroy international amity.

FUTURE FARMERS

Two years ago the federal board of vocational education began organizing into state clubs members of agricultural classes in the high schools. Thirty states have been partly organized with a total membership of 27,000. They are now to be formed into a national organization to be known as the Future Farmers of America.

The government's objective is the stemming of the tide of young men and women away from the farm with consequent loss to agriculture. It hopes to interest more farm children in agriculture and to show them that they can intelligently choose farming for a career.

By fostering this movement the federal government will aid both the high schools and agriculture. More and better farmers is the promise held forth for agriculture. Farm parents are to have less cause to protest that the high schools are taking their children away from the farm by teaching them everything but farming.

What better service can the vocational education board perform than by striving to make the rural high school a place where scientific farming, according to modern methods and open-minded to every advance, will be shown as an attractive industry, promising rewards equivalent to those offered by urban occupation.

SYNOPSIS
 Joe Lane, ex-pugilist and star singer of QESA Radio Station, quarrels with Arthur Phillips, his manager, because of Phillips' attention to his wife, Katherine. Joe hits the manager, who, in falling, strikes his head and dies. Joe serves a year in prison for manslaughter and their son, Little Pal, Joe forces his wife to seek a divorce by accusing her of intimacy with Dr. Merrill, the physician for whom she works as nurse. Immediately upon his release Joe goes to see his boy in school. Little Pal, wanting to be with his father, follows him when he leaves and is hit by a truck.

 Joe shook his head, moaning. He could feel the baby stirring in his arms. He wasn't dead then—he wasn't dead! Would the ambulance never come! Little Pal's eyelids flickered. He was regaining consciousness. Down the street the clang-clang of an ambulance bell jangled.

That ride to the hospital Joe never remembered. All that he could think of was the length of time it took them to get there. The song plunger sat on the stretcher, the child in his arms, rocking back and forth—back and forth. After hours had passed, or so it seemed to Joe, they drew up before the entrance to a musty, red brick building. There was an opening and closing of doors, and then a nurse appeared, and more nurses, and they reached for the child, taking him from Joe's arms. Mechanically the song plunger trailed after these dim wraiths who fluttered through long corridors that smelled of ether and antiseptics.

Only a miracle of surgery could bring his voice back

Then suddenly Joe was halted by one of the nurses who held numerous little cards in her hand.

"You'll have to fill out this card," the woman informed him. "Right this way."

Down the hall the internes were disappearing with the baby.

"No! No!" Joe's voice rose in a shriek. "I've gotta be with my kid." He pushed past the nurse and at last came to a dimly lighted desk where several nurses were grouped about, buzzing in low conversation.

"I want my baby!" he announced to the nurses at the desk, breaking in upon their talk.

"He hasn't filled out the card yet," came that persistent voice, and the first nurse appeared at Joe's side.

The white clad girl, sitting in front of the desk, looked up at Joe. She was a younger woman, and her blue eyes held some look of sympathy.

"That's all right, Miss Higgins," she nodded to the older nurse, and rose hastily. "That can be done later." "I'll take you down to the operating room," she added, turning to the song plunger.

"Thank you," Joe's voice trembled, even as his entire body was trembling. He followed his guide through a maze of corridors, up on an elevator, then through more corridors. "You see, I—I've been away for a long time," he tried to explain shakily to the nurse. "And I hadn't seen the child, and then this had to happen."

"I see," the girl smiled sympathetically. "That's too bad. But I'm sure Dr. Johnson will do everything he can."

The two walked in silence through another corridor and then the nurse pushed open a door that led into a white tiled room. She pointed to another door.

"The doctor's in there with your child," she whispered. "I'll wait here with you until he comes out. I can't go in while he's busy in there."

"You're very kind," Joe mumbled. The nurse beckoned him to a white chair that stood with other white chairs against the wall. She sat down, and Joe sat beside her. He ran his hand through his hair, trying to make himself somewhat presentable. His hair was still short. He wondered, for a moment, whether anyone would understand why. He hoped not. He wanted everything possible done for Little Pal, and perhaps the doctor wouldn't think so much of a child who had an ex-convict for a father. It was intense agony, waiting—waiting—for that door to open. When the doctor did appear it meant that he would know something. Joe told himself. A wave of nausea enveloped him. If the news were bad! No—not he didn't dare to think of that. It couldn't—it wouldn't be bad news.

"How did it happen?" the nurse asked in a gentle voice.

"He was in school," the song plunger began to explain. "I'd been up to see him, and I left. He wanted to go with me, and I guess he followed me, because when I turned around all I saw was a truck, and then I found the kid there—" His voice broke.

"Yes, I know," the nurse nodded. "Here's the doctor now." She got up to meet a white-clad, middle aged man who appeared from the inner room. "This is the child's father." She motioned to the doctor. "I'll go now." She turned, leaving the two men alone.

"You're Dr. Johnson, aren't you?" Joe questioned, remembering the name the nurse had told him. "I'm the boy's father. I'm—" he hesitated. He was going to say: "I'm Joe Lane." And then he remembered those days in the prison. Perhaps he'd better just let it go at that. "Is he—the boy?" he hesitated.

But the doctor had been through many like cases before. He clasped his lean, long fingered hands behind his back. "He isn't going to die, I can assure you of that." He even smiled a little, his thin face lighting up.

"Thank God!" There was a world of reverence in Joe's long, convulsive sigh. "But—what about him?"

"The case is a serious one, though," the doctor continued. "The child's spine has been injured and his nervous system has had a terrible paralytic shock."

"Aw, that can't be right, Doctor!" Joe exclaimed, catching hold of the white coat sleeve, pulling at the physician's arm. "It can't be, I tell you. You gotta cure him. You just gotta, Doctor!"

"Well," the doctor was saying slowly, evidently pondering the matter in his mind, "I know that we'll try our best, you can rest assured. But in a case like this a specialist is needed. Not only a specialist in the ordinary sense of the word, but a great specialist who can work miracles. As I said, the child won't die, but we want to cure him completely, if that is possible."

Joe hesitated thoughtfully. "Who are some of the specialists," he said finally. "I'll get one for him." No matter what was needed he'd get it for Little Pal, he swore to himself.

"Well, there's Dr. Keller of Berlin," the physician counted off the names on his fingers. "There's Dr. Windsor in London, and there's Dr. Merrill, right here in New York. Any one of them might be able to help. This isn't a case where one can make promises."

"Dr. Merrill!" Joe exclaimed sharply. "Dr. Robert Merrill!" Why that was Katherine's friend, the doctor for whom she worked.

"Yes. Do you know him?" Dr. Johnson glanced at the man's rather shabby suit and wondered. "He's a very expensive man, you know," he suggested.

"Yes, I know," Joe returned bitterly. "But I can't help that. My boy's gotta have every chance. I don't care what it costs. He's gotta have the best treatment there is, and I'll get it for him. He's all I got in the world. You don't know! I'd go through hell for that kid." His eyes blazed.

"There, there," the doctor soothed, laying his hand on Joe's shoulder. "I know. You calm yourself. I'll help in any way I can, but if you know Dr. Merrill yourself you'll stand a lot better chance. I'm sure. He's a busy man, and he only takes exceptional cases of this sort. I'd advise you to get the boy to him right away. The sooner the better in this instance. Now, do you want to see the child?"

"Thank you, doctor," Joe sighed and turned to follow the physician into the next room.

CHAPTER XVI
 The persistent clamor of a telephone bell brought Katherine to her senses with a start. She sat up in bed, gazing about sleepily. Again the ringing. She put her feet onto the floor, stepping into a pair of mules and then went over and picked up the receiver. Automatically she glanced at the clock. Seven o'clock. She could have slept another hour. Probably Dr. Merrill wanted her on a case. She assumed her professional voice. Then suddenly her hands gripped the telephone, clutching it until her knuckles showed white beneath the skin.

Factors of Personal Service in Stock Fire Insurance

The Agent:

Stock Fire Insurance companies have personal representatives in almost every city, town and hamlet in this country.

In no other business does the agent mean so much—in no other field is the relation of the agent with his principal more intimate.

These thousands of local agents, entrusted with great authority—qualified and equipped to render intelligent insurance service—make available to every American community the many helpful activities of the Stock Fire Insurance business.

The Underwriter:

On the judgment and experience of the underwriter, contracts for insurance protection are accepted or rejected. The public and the insurance companies are jointly interested in preventing unwarranted or illegitimate loss payments. By considering individual responsibility, and using the vast amount of reliable information by which risks are judged, the underwriter serves the public by avoiding improper losses.

The Inspector:

Here is "the watchman in the tower". He is alert—intent upon discovering hazards which threaten the destruction of life and property and add to the cost of insurance. From his findings you may obtain sound advice, based upon knowledge of construction, fire prevention, fire fighting methods, hazards of occupancy and processes, and other conditions which go to make property safe or unsafe.

The Adjuster:

This man follows disaster. Owing to the disturbed condition of the policy-holder at the moment, his task is difficult. But his purpose is to settle each legitimate claim in keeping with the rights of the interested parties. Less than one percent of his adjustments—with nearly a million reports of losses each year—are followed by litigation; a fine tribute to his fairness and ability.

All of these personal factors are an essential part of the service rendered by Stock Fire Insurance.

Only an Insurance Agent

That's what he used to be—only an insurance agent. He took what was handed to him and was glad to get it. He "wrote" fire insurance as a side line.

Today, the fire insurance agent has grown with the development of modern fire insurance methods. Now he is a specialist—a man you can always consult—an expert, able to work out the right kind and right amount of protection against every fire risk for you.

We are modern fire insurance agents, able to take the guesswork out of insurance and replace it with certainty. Writing insurance is only a part of our business. Planning adequate protection for your individual needs is our most important work.

We are always glad to have property owners consult us about any of their fire insurance problems—whether they are our clients or not.

May Establish Library
For Bucks County Soon

County Council of the Parent and Teachers' Association.

This was the second meeting held in the interest of a county library. Another meeting will be held in the near future when the committee of five will submit a report.

The county library when once established operates in the same manner as a library in a large city with its branches in the suburbs and districts. The county library would have a central distribution point with branches throughout the county. It will be entirely free to the public.

Explaining the operation of a county library, Miss Matthews said that everybody in the county, regardless of whether they live on the farm or in the village or city, will be served.

"The books come from a county library headquarters," Miss Matthews explained. "The county library operates like the city library system. The main library is in the county seat with branches, like chain stores, in each town, village and school. Local people are in charge of these libraries. The people on farms may have books sent by mail or delivered by truck."

"The books are loaned free to everyone in the county. The library is supported by appropriations from the county funds, as are the other county departments. The library is managed by a county library board serving without pay and appointed by the county commissioners."

"A librarian specially trained in the business of selecting and buying books, and in making them useful to all is in charge of the work. The librarian constantly visits the branch libraries to keep in touch with the book needs of each community."

"Books of all kinds—for old and young—stories, biographies, histories, books that help with school or club, farm or business, are to be found in the county library."

"The county library does not conflict with the school library. It supplements it. It furnishes books for outside reading which the schools cannot do in sufficient numbers."

"We can get the county library service by asking the county commissioners for an appropriation for it, or by levying a tax for its support. Not more than two mills, probably less, is needed in tax levy to support the county library. It will cost the average family less than the price of a good book per year—less than one dollar per capita."

"To assist in getting a county library, tell your county commissioners that you want it and get your neighbors to ask for it too. More information about it can be secured from the State Library, Library Extension Division, Harrisburg."

Miss Matthews said that over 200 counties in thirty-two of the forty-eight states have established county library service of various types. California has the largest output—46 out of 58 counties, she said. In New Jersey a third of the counties have libraries.

A general idea of books distribution was given by the speaker who said that mail service on all rural routes is sometimes used. There is a book collection in all rural schools, service stations in cross-road stores and post-offices, in community houses, in farm bureau or grange headquarters, and other convenient centers. In some counties there is a book truck, a branch library on wheels for the smallest of communities.

New Medicine Brings Relief
From Stomach Ailment, After All Others Tried Failed

MR. H. M. MUZZY

"I suffered terribly with stomach trouble," said Mr. H. M. Muzzy, 6727 Rowan Ave., Pittsburgh. "Painful bloating followed every meal and I finally came to dread the thought of food. I belched undigested food and hot sour liquids which caused painful heartburn. My nerves became terribly weak and I spent many sleepless nights. Dizzy headaches often held on for hours at a time."

"I tried Konjola as a last resort for I had tried many other medicines without relief. I am happy to endorse this great medicine. Today I am free from stomach trouble of any kind. I never bloat, and my appetite is excellent. I eat my favorite foods knowing the old pain and discomfort will not occur. My nerves have improved wonderfully, and my general condition is better than in a long time."

Konjola is sold in Bristol at Hoffman's Cut Rate Store, and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.—(Adv.)

TASTE!

WHAT seems like a slight difference, in one cigarette, grows mighty important in a month's smoking.

You might take Chesterfield's silky mildness for granted—but just notice that it never tastes "flat." And where else but in Chesterfield will you find such delicate shading of flavor, such spicy aroma of choice tobaccos, such rich and satisfying character?

Better taste is always important—and in Chesterfield it's
